Roberts' Ramblings

“ Dec. 12, 1990: A funny thing happened on the way to Christmas. After 16 years at the same company, I hated my job with a passion. They say the best part about beating your head against a wall is that it feels so good when you stop. I stopped. I asked to be laid off and I was. I haven't felt this good in years! But that's not what this story is about.

I decided to hold off on job-hunting until after the first of the year. With a lot of free time available, I expanded my activities as JoAnn, especially in the area of college and university lectures. I did more crossdressing and more talking about crossdressing in October and November of last year than I had in the previous two years put together. One of my activities was a television show called Evening Magazine which originates locally at 7:00 p.m., but has national distribution. The crew from EM came to a Renaissance meeting and followed us to a lecture at a nearby university. The final piece was about seven minutes long and I must admit they did an excellent job. The piece treated us with respect for the education and support work we do. They even put our address and phone number into the clip. But, once again, I digress.

Days after the show aired, I had reason to call my old workplace and speak to one of the women who had worked for me. (I had managed two groups of people, all females.) She'd known about my crossdressing before I left the job and she'd had no problem with the information. After we concluded our business and began to catch up on personal matters, my friend informed me that just about everyone had seen the Evening Magazine piece and I had been recognized by my voice. OHMIGAWD! I'd been "outed" by my own devices.

A week later I received a phone call from another woman who had worked for me to invite me to the holiday lunch they'd set up for their small group. Only the people in this group were invited and they wanted me to join them for lunch. I'd been gone almost four months and they missed me! I felt good that my managerial skill had been so appreciated. But, it was the next statement that really floored me. They'd seen the videotape and were curious about my crossdressing, so, if I wanted to, they wanted to meet JoAnn.

My first reaction was to say, "Sure," and my second was to say, "No." I finally succumbed to my third reaction, "I'll let you know, but one way or the other, I'll be there." I wanted to give myself and my friends time to think this over.

Dec. 20, 1990: The luncheon was yesterday. I thought it over and talked with them about it again. I went as JoAnn. I was very nervous as I pulled up to the building where I had once worked. I got out of the car and went to the front doors to wait. One guy I had worked with walked right past me without a blink, but my heart skipped a beat anyway. Finally, they came out and off we went.

It was a wonderful luncheon. We spent about three hours catching up on gossip about work and answering questions about my crossdressing. My former employees seemed quite at ease with JoAnn. I felt so validated as a person that these women could accept me for what I am. I had found new friends where there had been only business acquaintances before.

One woman in the group is pregnant. As I left them in front of the building, another one of them whispered to me, "We'll call you and let you know when the baby shower will be." Now, how much more accepted could I feel than that!

We often invent our own devils to plague us. These people accepted JoAnn because they had known me before and knew that I was a good person, regardless of the kind of clothes I choose to wear. It doesn't matter why you dress. What matters is how you conduct yourself when you do it in public. Do it with pride and self-respect. You'll be surprised at people's reactions.

LadyLike: Some of your background information is very similar to many other TVs, that is you started dressing when you were quite young, but you did not seem to get heavily involved with it until just recently. What got you started now?

Jeri Jones: Actually, I didn't get much of a start in my youth. I recall, as a child, occasionally trying on my mother's discarded stockings, nothing more. Otherwise, my childhood and adolescence were spent doing normal masculine things like Boy Scouts, fishing, hunting, and high school athletics.

I don't recall feeling feminine yearnings until my mid-twenties when I renewed my flirtation with stockings and pantyhose.

Browsing in a bookstore one day, I happened upon Harry Benjamin's book, The Transsexual Phenomenon. [Dr. Benjamin was a world recognized expert in gender issues and is credited with bringing the first real data about transsexualism to the professional counseling world. His book, long out of print, is now available from the Outreach Institute in Boston, see the Resource listing for an address. — Ed.]

I bought it and realized he was describing me in one of his lower transvestite classifications. I was stunned, but my interest in the subject was aroused. As I devoured this and other books on the subject, my feminine awareness began to develop. I became an occasional "closet dresser" and began to accumulate some fancy articles of femininity.

Then, one day, I ordered a copy of LadyLike... because the cover caught my attention. The subsequent profile of Lucille Spencer (LadyLike #3) intrigued me. Here was someone who was married, had high family and moral values, and whose family didn't know [about her crossdress-

Perhaps it's lucky that I have a strong attraction to hosiery and heels because I can wear them more often and fulfill some of my cross-dressing need.

I would love to tell my family, introduce them to this wonderful creature and have them accept and love Jeri... but I don't think it would happen exactly that way. So, for the time being (at home), Jeri remains at large and in the closet.

You mentioned hiding shaved legs and chest. I'm lucky that I'm blonde and have a fair complexion. Consequently, my body hair is very light and somewhat sparse. Some time ago, I found that using Jolen cream bleach on my legs, my hair became almost invisible under hosiery.

After some plucking of the few hairs that strayed above my "cleavage," I found that a few strokes of the razor every morning would do just as well.

Should I want to look very "lady like" on one of my few nights out, I use the cream bleach on ing.] Yet, Lucille was developing her feminine self and havinf a good time at it.

I longed to identify with that scenario and contacted Lucille. She helped me understand that I owe it to myself to develop and expand my feminine horizons.

LL: You say that your wife and family don't know about Jeri. I've had many readers ask how some of our girls keep them from noticing things like shaved legs and chest. Can you tell us a little about what it's like keeping this hidden?

JJ: My life is actually very complete and full without Jeri, and I wouldn't want to do anything to jeopardize my situation. Crossdressing in my thing, but a commodity that my family didn't bargain for. Although I love it and accept it in myself, it would be a burden for them. Therefore, I rarely dress. During 1990, I dressed only on five occasions. Four of those times were for only a few hours. The fifth was for a few days.

my legs, arms, underarms, and remaining chest hair. Occasionally, I lightly “thin” the leg and arm hair with soft, gentle strokes of the razor.

This subtle approach works nicely for me and, because of my natural light hair color, has gone unnoticed by family and friends.

LL: You live in a very conservative state and I imagine there might be problems if you were discovered. How often do you get out as Jeri and have you ever had any problems or strange encounters?

JJ: You're right... Utah is a very conservative state. As a consequence, I don't take chances here. To be discovered could be an occupational and family tragedy for me.

A few years back, I made one local daylight shopping venture as Jeri that I'll never forget. I noticed a security guard following me (or so I thought). I felt a sudden sense of panic and tried — nonchalantly — to stroll to my car and head home, while my heart hammered away inside.

I decide then that going out dressed locally wasn't worth the risk. My only local outings since have been to occasional meetings of our Tri-Ess group [Alpha Rho Provesta - Ed.].

Sounds like I'm as conservative as the state in which I live, doesn't it?

LL: You mentioned in one of your letters that you've had two weekend adventures. Since then, we saw each other at the 1990 Fantasia Fair, so that makes three adventures. Tell us about those activities.

JJ: My first real adventure came while I was visiting another city on business. I longed to feel the wind in my curls and in my skirts, to feel the swish of slinky silks on my contours and to hear the staccato cadence of my heels on the pavement. Using the Resources section of LadyLike, I located a friendly boutique and arranged a in feminine finery and relished each delicious moment of the adventure. How difficult it was to exchange the silks and frills for the frump of male attire! Fantasia Fair made a subtle, but indelible, change in me which makes me more tolerant and tender. I like it!

LL: This next question is a stumper. Now that you've made "cover girl", where does Jeri go from here? What's next for you?

JJ: I adore my feminine side and would love to see it continue to develop. I plan to make new friends and to discretely attend future events. You're right... that's all hard to do with my family in the dark. Since they are my first love, however, I'll try not to let Jeri interfere with my devotion and duty to them.

On the other hand, I have developed some friendships which allow Jeri to grow subtly and sweetly. A little moderation and balance will still indulge Jeri with the expression she needs to become... who knows?

make-over. What a luscious thrill that was! I learned where a local TV gathering was planned for the evening and Jeri went public. It was frightening but everyone was amiable and accepting. They actually made a fuss over me. A new and marvelous dimension of my personality began to unfold. Naturally, I could hardly wait to emerge again.

A visit to Chicago afforded a similar opportunity and I met some wonderful people there. Needless to say, my feminine persona was again ecstatic to be liberated. During the past two years, I've had similar joys on other occasions.

Fantasia Fair, however, proved to be the unequaled highlight of my crossdressing existence. Now it was days en femme (three to be exact). I adored being included in the parties and pageantry. For a "closet lady," like me, it was a thrill to meet you and other TV "celebrities." I made some close friends and began to appreciate the frustrations and satrugglers of others. I soon began to feel wonderfully natural

Girl Talk

Girl Talk is your forum. Any question on any topic is fair game from makeup secrets to the psychology of gender transpositions. If you have a question for JoAnn, write to her care of this magazine.

Dear JoAnn,

In issue #7 you answered a question from Diane in Kansas City about how to hide an erection if out dressed. May I please comment on a method I use?

I've had the same problem and pushing my penis between my legs didn't work too well for me. It always worked its way back out. Then I discovered New Serenity bladder control pads from Johnson & Johnson. This is what I did.

I shaved most of the hair from between my legs so there isn't any hair to pull and in doing so I feel even more feminine. Next

I apply a small amount of feminine body powder between my legs to stay soft and dry. Finally, I put the Serenity pad between my legs and push back my penis. The pad has a contoured shape that fits snugly between the legs and it has an adhesive strip on the outside that secures it to the crotch of the panties so it won't move. They work best with panties that are snug, but I've had luck with all styles.

The penis is in place, won't slide out and won't show through clothing.

The New Serenity pads can be purchased in any drug, food or department store. A trial size box of three is $.98 in my area. It works for me. Try it.

Now for my question. The nearest group is about 60 miles away. I know there must be other TVs/TSs in my hometown, but I have no idea how to contact them. I've placed ads in TV publications and answered ads but nothing comes of it. How do I find friends I can do things with?

Andrea P., Topeka, KS

Dear Andrea,

Thanks for sharing that tip with us. I'm sure there are many like Diane that will appreciate this alternative solution. It never ceases to amaze me how you girls come up with these "tricks."

Now to answer your question. You are experiencing the double-sided nature of transgendered people. Some of the people who advertise are not really interested in meeting someone face-to-face. They're looking for cheap fantasies. Others that do want to meet people are looking for sexual satisfaction. The small percentage who, like you, are looking for friends or support are so scared silly that they'll be discovered or found out, they regret placing the ad and some never answer the mail.

It's like that everywhere you go. Your situation is no different than mine was four years ago here in the Philadelphia area. There was no support group nearby and I had no way of meeting others like myself. I took the matter into my own hands and started my own group, Renaissance, which now has over 350 members. We have people who drive 3 hours for our meeting because there is nothing else close-by for them.

I suggest that you get a Post Office box (for your own security) and then place an ad in as many local papers as you can. Word the ad carefully so no one gets the idea you're trolling for sex partners. Then wait and see who contacts you. A friend of mine moved to Burlington, Vermont and did as I told you to do. Within a month he had 17 names and addresses. Of those, he finally made face-to-face contact with two. Unfortunately, he had to move again and his little group never got off the ground. But, that's how it starts. You see a need, you're going to have to fill it. It does no good to just sit and wonder where everyone else is. You've got to go find them.

In order for people to stick together they have to trust one another. Trust comes slowly in this culture. The risks are too great to be careless.

Dear JoAnn,

Can you tell me which is better; waxing or shaving my legs? Also, is there anything that will remove a beard and sideburns, temporarily or permanently.

Linda M., Waltham, Mass.

Dear Linda,

There are positives and negatives to both waxing and shaving your legs.

Lets take shaving first. Shaving is the easiest and possibly quickest way to remove leg hair. It is also the cheapest. Those are the positives. The negatives are you can cut yourself pretty badly if not careful and you get stubble within a day or two. Shaving just doesn't last very long.

Waxing has a longer effect because you are literally ripping the hairs out by the roots.

There is no stubble for quite some time and the hairs tend to grow back more silky and finer in texture. The length of time the hair takes to grow back depends on your body chemistry. It could be four days or four weeks. That's the good part. Now the bad: waxing is moderately expensive; it's painful; and you can burn yourself with hot wax. There is a cold wax but it is not reusable and therefore is even more expensive. Also, hairs can become in-grown causing unsightly red marks and even infections.

In between waxing and shaving is a chemical depilatory, like Nair or Neet. These dissolve the hair at the root and so they produce a smooth surface like waxing does. Depilatories are moderately expensive and may not even work on male body hair since it is quite different than female body hair. There is also the possibility of a chemical sensitivity and a resulting rash.

I won't even go into the Epilady method of exquisite torture.

As for your beard and sideburns. No chemical will remove them permanently. The only way to do that is electrolysis, which is expensive. If, however, you are plagued with ingrown hairs from shaving, electrolysis will save you from that nuisance. Look in the phone book under "Electrology" and check to see if the operator is licensed and insured.

Dear JoAnn,

In LadyLike #7 you mentioned there are dangers in taking hormones if you're not planning reassignment surgery. What are the dangers and side effects? I'm taking Premarin and I was under the impression that it was safe.

Sharon T., Berkeley, CA

Dear Sharon,

I am sending you the text of two articles that appeared in (1) The Renaissance News and (2) The Primrose, newsletter of the Chicago Gender Society.

Basically, unless you are taking the hormones under the care of a doctor, specifically an endocrinologist, you're playing Russian roulette with your life. Here's why:

The facts about estrogens...

Excerpted from the Physician's Desk Reference, March '89 Renaissance News

Estinyl - synthetic estrogen

Chemical name: 19-Nor-17 $\alpha$ -pregna-1,3,5(10)-trien-20-yne-3,17-diol

Premarin -a mixture of estrogens obtained exclusively from natural sources.

The dangers are:

- Cancer - Estrogens can cause development of tumors in animals such as tumors of the breast, cervix, vagina or liver. One study raises the possibility that the use of estrogen may increase the risk of breast cancer in later years.

- Gall bladder disease - There is an increased risk of developing gall bladder disease requiring surgery.

- Abnormal blood clotting - Estrogens increase the risk of blood clotting in various parts of the body. This can result in a stroke (clot in the brain), a heart attack (clot in a blood vessel of the heart), or a pulmonary embolism (a clot that forms in the leg or pelvis, breaks off and travels to the lungs). Any of these can be fatal.

General Precautions:

- A complete medical history should be taken with specific reference to blood pressure and breasts.

- Estrogens cause some degree of fluid retention and conditions such as epilepsy, migraine and cardiac or renal problems may become aggravated.

- Oral contraceptives appear to be associated with an increased incidence of mental depression.

Adverse Reactions:

- Tenderness, enlargement and secretion of the breasts
- Nausea, vomiting, and cramps
- Loss of scalp hair, hirsutism
- Steepening of corneal curvature, intolerance of contact lenses
- Headache, migraine, dizziness, mental depression

The straight dope on hormones...

Karen Baumgardner, CGS Primrose, Dec '88
Every once in awhile I get a letter asking whether or not I can tell somebody how they can get hormones.

The first time I received such an inquiry, I thought to myself, "Yeah, I can help people by dispensing this type of information." Then I got to thinking.

Quite a few of us have been inspired by false information concerning the magic of hormones. Our community has about 30 years worth of misinformation and fantasy literature, some of it put out by irresponsible dreamers, and some written and/or published by people who should know better. An awful, awful lot of it gives the impression that hormones can be administered indiscriminately, often without the ingester's knowledge, and Viola!, instant breasts, rounded hips, higher voice, loss of beard and body hair. The dream-come-true of every crossdresser, from TS to TG to TV.

And, everyone lives happily ever after.

Of course, it doesn't happen like this very often, if at all.

First of all, unless you're overdosing, the whole process is very slow. You will develop breasts over a period of time, but the size will depend more on heredity than on how long and how much hormones you take. Your pelvic area will fill out somewhat, but not a whole lot. Your voice won't change, your beard and body hair won't stop growing.

So, what will hormones do for you? First and foremost, they are mood-altering. You'll encounter fits of depression, go on crying jags for no apparent reason and go on crying jags under particular circumstances. A smell, a phrase, a television theme song. Any one of these might set you off. Do you work with the public? Do your co-workers know anything about your transgenderism? How about your family, your friends? Can you explain why your emotions have suddenly gone out of control?

But that's minor stuff. There are also a myriad amount of physical problems that hormones can cause. First and foremost is liver damage. I have a close friend who got hormones on the "black market" well over 10 years ago, and the physical change suggests severe scarring of the liver that appears to be permanent.

This may be an extreme case, but prescribing for yourself and overloading on the dosage to "speed things up" are a natural temptation in a situation in which you are not under competent medical supervision. In addition, hormones are dangerous for people with a history of heart problems, and the long term effects are finally being taken into consideration as far as whether or not hormones can cause cancer.

For the TS, this is all a necessary and calculated risk. For the rest of us, it's mainly a matter of something that would be "fun" to do.

I'm not your mother, and I'm not stick in the mud about all of this. I eat foods that are high in cholesterol, smoke like a chimney, have a little too much to drink now and then, and have spent most of my life disregarding rules and regulations. So, I'm not about to tell everybody that they shouldn't take hormones. Would you listen anyway?

What I'm going to advise is that if you HAVE to do it, do it right. If you're a TS, you've probably been through a gender clinic. Whether or not you continue to work within the program of a clinic, the endocrinologist will at least monitor your dosage and look for any problems that might arise during the initial stages of treatment. If all appears well, many TSs will look for another practitioner to continue treatment for reasons of cost, convenience, or sometimes personality.

For the rest of us, a good rule of thumb might be: if you have to ask, you're not ready. Read up about hormones. Check out stuff in the library.

Also, talk to other people who are on hormone therapy. If they are no longer on hormones, ask them why they quit. Find out what it was like. Find out if they got what they wanted from it. From what I've seen around, apparently not.

There are a couple of doctors in the area that dispense hormones to order. No questions asked. I don't agree with this policy, but it is at least a guarantee of minimum doctor's supervision. But, know what you're looking for and the possible consequences before you even consider walking in the front door. And, street hormones are like street drugs. Stay away from the stuff or it will kill ya.

Dear JoAnn,

I have a problem. I can only wear glasses because I have terrible eye irritation if I wear contacts. Where can I get a pair of Ladies glasses by sending my prescription or an old pair of my male glasses? Also, where can I buy something to cover parts of my eyebrows. I can't pluck them because the people I work with would not understand.

Cyndi, Auburn, NY

Dear Cyndi,

According to my copy of the 1990 Crossdresser's International Shopping Guide, you can order women's glasses from Prism Optical, 10992 NW 7th Ave., N. Miami, FL 33168. You should write to them for a catalog and ordering information. You should also have your own copy of the Shopper's Guide which can be ordered from JMPG, PO Box 7217, Burbank, CA 91510-7217. The cost is about $10.

As to your eyebrows, since you wear glasses, there is a certain amount of pluck and shaping that you can do that will be hidden by the eyeglass frames. Once you've cleaned up the brows, you can hide them further with eyebrow wax. This can be purchased from any theatrical supply house. Check the phone book in your area. An alternative is to coat the brow with UHU® glue stick and then cover the hair with foundation and powder. Redraw the brows with a pencil (Thanks to Wildside and the Jackie Loren Video for this trick.)

Hugs, JoAnn

CLAUDIA
WEST GERMANY

Germany is a very nice country to visit, but the tourist attractions, like Munich, Heidelberg, and Neuschwanstein, only give a brief glimpse of life here. As in many other countries, the social tolerance for people who are "different," like those of us who dress as women, seems to be getting better. I'm sure it depends very much on where you live. The acceptance will be much greater in larger cities like Hamburg, Berlin or Frankfurt than in small towns, but it could be a problem anywhere.

It is different here for the TS and the TV. There exists support bureaus with groups for transsexuals in the larger cities. For transvestites, most groups are private circles with different goals and there are only a very few.

Transidentitas was founded in 1985 as a support group for both TVs and TSs. Its primary purpose is to provide objective information to the public about crossdressing, showing crossdressers ways out of isolation and making contacts with others who share similar interests. We want to be open to both TVs and TSs because we know that often a part of their development takes the same path, although we know that the interests of the TVs and TSs sometimes are in opposition. Additional goals are to help strengthen feelings of self-esteem and to work with other like-minded groups in Germany and foreign countries. We publish a member magazine four times a year, plus other information booklets on a variety of themes.

Meetings are held weekly for different interest groups at a support center in Frankfurt. Of importance is our annual conference when we have experts come to talk about issues, such as problems with hormone treatments, crossdressing in an historical view, judicial aspects, how to live with partners, and cosmetic advice. About 100 transvestites and transsexuals were present at our last conference in March 1990.

On the first Saturday of each month, we hold a general meeting. It's a chance for members who do not live locally to participate in the activities. There is a hotel nearby with an understanding staff where out-of-town members may stay overnight. We also have social events. All of the photos here were taken at the Summernight Ball in June.

Let me introduce some members of our Board of Directors. Our president is Cornelia Klein. She describes herself as a woman with a transsexual past, but "Heart of Transidentitas" would be a more appropriate description for her energy and restless activity. Over the years, her knowledge and wisdom of our problems and issues have grown. She is a source for us of strength and comfort.

Anita manages the membership magazine and collects the information for our publications. Her other task, together with Cornelia, is answering the telephone and giving advice. Monica Vera, our vice-president, is responsible for the transsexual activities. Chantal does the same for the crossdressers, as well as being an entertainer and disc-jockey at the socials. Additionally, Monika is our secretary and Sonja is treasurer.

I will close this short introduction to Transidentitas with an invitation. If you will be visiting Frankfurt, you are welcome to attend our meetings. The majority of our members speak English. Here is our address: Transidentitas, Postfach 10146, D-6050 Offenbach, W. Germany

Michael West Together At Last

Article by Daniel M. T. Graham

It's a mad world when Michael West takes the stage and does his one man show with a cast of 25 characters. His is not really an impersonator or a mimic, but an actor who is living out his fantasy of being on the Merv Griffin show and being all the guests. Among the people he portrays are: Ella Fitzgerald, Carol Channing, Sammy Davis, Jr., and Jim Nabors.

Michael West opens his show sitting on a bed in pajama bottoms. He suffers from illusions of Merv and the audience is allowed a look into his mind. After he introduces himself with a little song, he disappears behind a partition and a video screen comes on with a matronly women who tells us we are to remain in our seats, and if she catches us fooling around during the assembly she will take us to the Principal's office. This character is the horrid elementary school teacher we all had as children and still hate to this day.

Next comes an advertisement for a record from Merv. On the long playing album we have all our "favorite" stars. Jim Nabors, Peggy Lee and Luciano Pavarotti all sing parts of Wham's Wake Me Up Before You Go. Basically, they repeat the same lines of the song and it's amusing to see how different people would interpret the song. That is, interpret it as Michael West would like to. West has thrown together three people who would never be on the same record and since it's a Merv Enterprise record, who'd buy it anyway?

Next, Ella Fitzgerald waddles across the stage and constantly wipes her brow as she sings and wrings her handkerchief. After she is done with her number, Michael turns around and removes the dress to do Pearl Bailey. He jumps around on the stage and belts out a tune that is loud and raucous..

Ethel Merman has her own kid's show, a take-off of Pee Wee Playhouse, and this is previewed on the video screen. Imagine Ethel Merman in Pee Wee's tight suit and bow tie, belting out show tunes. Well, it's not a pretty picture. Playbills and sheet music dance around in spasmodic manner and the "secret word" for the day is Broadway.

Steve Lawrence and Eydie Gorme appear to sing together, Eydie on the screen and Steve on stage. Steve really gets into it, but Eydie has had enough and is seen running off with Mel Torme. She going to become Eydie Gorme Torme. In the end, Steve sits at the dressing table singing "The Boy In The Mumu," as he is transformed into Eydie.

Jim and Tammy Bakker stop in as Jim is on a work furlough, but their visit is cut short when they start using Steve and Eydie's material.

Liberace has a show, Mr. Liberace's Neighborhood. Mr. Liberace shows all the boys his rings and floats around the audience while the audience is entreated to feel his cape lined with chicken feathers. Mr. Liberace just loves endangered species and chicken is an endangered species in New York City.

Carol, Michael and Sammy - Fabulous Impersonations

The "cast" of Together At Last

Liza Minelli is next on screen, at home in the Betty Ford Clinic. She gives us a tour and her roommate is none other than Elizabeth Taylor. La Liz is out but we see her bed is covered with pizza boxes, take-out food containers and pretzel bags. Liza just sweeps the stuff aside and plops down onto the bed and talks to us about the pressures of being a star. She takes us to the gym and the cafeteria where she helps out. She says, "You have to remember that the Betty Ford Clinic is not a spa or a resort, but a place people come to work out their problems."

I can only write about a small fraction of the show. To cover it all would need an article many times longer. West is one of the most innovative performers to come along in some time in the area of one-man shows. He has a broad scope of people at whom he pokes fun and does so with taste and style. West has been working in this format for the last five years and his show is always changing, so when you see him perform, be prepared for the unbelievable talent of Michael West.

Marlayna Lacie

LadyLike: Well, you're getting to be a VIP in Southern California and your photos had appeared in LadyLike quite often, I thought it was about time our readers found out more about you. So, give us a little background. How did it start for you?

Marlayna Lacie: I started crossdressing when I was in high school. I had a great part-time job as a stock clerk in a women's clothing store, so I had plenty of clothes to try on.

Later, when I was married, my wife decided to buy a wig for herself. She was working at a part-time job and doing her hair was becoming too "time consuming" for her.

One evening we were just sitting on our bed and she grabbed the wig and put it on my head. Next thing I knew, she was putting makeup on me too. That was all it took. I was hooked.

My wife didn't have a sister to relate to when she was growing up so I became her "little" sister. We were together for seven years before we divorced, but the crossdressing had nothing to do with the separation.

That was in Boston, over 10 years ago. After my divorce, I decided to move to Los Angeles.

LL: Everyone here loves your name. How did you come to choose it?

ML: About four years ago, I purchased a copy of Mistress Antoinette's Kinky Contacts magazine and placed an ad basically saying I was a "novice" crossdresser and that I was looking for an understanding woman to help me. I received a letter from a wonderful woman named Mistress Jennifer Antione. We corresponded and eventually she came to my apartment.

called "On The Scene" in one of them.

LL: We did a brief piece about your "On The Scene" parties in issue #7. What's the story "behind the scene" on these parties?

ML: That's a long story, but I'll try to make it short. Three years ago, a friend gave me a copy of a California "swinger" publication and it had a few TV ads in it. The publisher wrote that he was new to the "scene" and was interested in hearing from crossdressers.

I wrote and sent two photos. He wrote back and asked me to call. I did and we hit it off. I started writing basic articles about "coming out," learning to walk in heels, going out on Hallowe'en and the like. (I told you this was a long story, didn't I?)

Eventually, this guy started a magazine just for TVs and I moved my column into that publication TV Epic. My focus was to disseminate information and gossip about the local TV scene. We held a party at the Queen Mary Show

I put together what little I had and she brought her supplies. That was my first make-over in years. I loved it.

She asked me what my femme name would be, saying she couldn't very well use my male name looking as I did. I was stymied. So, Jennifer asked who my favorite actress was. I replied immediately — Marlene Dietrich. "Well," she said, "that sounds fine." So, originally I was Marlene. Since then I've modified it to Marlayna.

LL: Did Mistress Jennifer get you started going out in L.A.?

ML: Yes, she introduced me to the group of people here that are into what we call "the scene." I met other TVs and I eagerly worked at trying to look my best. I started going to the local TV bar regularly and a lot of private parties.

I also started writing articles for several West Coast TV publications. I have a regular column bar to introduce the magazine.

The party was a great success. For the next three weeks people kept asking me when there would be another one. I spoke to the magazine publisher, but he wasn't interested in "hosting" another party in the near future.

So, I talked to the owner of the Queen Mary who gave me permission to use the bar, and I talked a dear TS friend of mine, Melissa Moore, into being my co-hostess. In the summer of 1989 we started the Marlayna & Melissa Present "On The Scene Nite" parties on the second Saturday of each month. A year later we added our Fantasy Fashion Nite on the fourth Saturday.

LL: We also heard that you're involved in another gathering over in Orange County. Care to tell us a little about that?

ML: Yes, that's right. Last Spring, I wanted to get something like "On The Scene" going in Orange County. We had a difficult time finding a safe bar. Then, a friend of mine, Tasha La Blush told me about a gay club called "Act One" over in Garden Grove. (It's not too far from Disneyland.)

Anyway, we contacted the management there and got permission to set up a TV night. We call it "Cherchez La Femme" night and it's held the last Friday of each month.

The club is very nice and our "nites" have been enjoyable. It's great to have a place "in the neighborhood" to go to.

LL: What else are you involved in?

ML: Well, I've been working part-time for Jim Bridges at his Cosmetic Boutique & Workshop in Studio City. It's right next door to the Queen Mary, which is very convenient.

I enjoy being a part of the growing TV/TS community in southern California. I'm proud of the successful events that I'm involved with, especially "On The Scene."

A Wife's Tale

I first met Dee, later to become my husband, about ten years ago at one of those very rough, smoke filled, honky tonk cowboy bars that you can only find in Texas. I was working there as a barmaid due to the unhappy circumstances in my life that are not a part of this story. Dee was there with his buddies from his work place. I think Dee was there as a part of an experiment to change his life-style.

I did not realize how very different from that image of roughneck machismo Dee really was. I just knew he was different. He was much better groomed, his clothes were clean and crisply ironed and he looked much younger than his actual age. More than that, he was nice and treated all the girls who worked in the bar as ladies and with respect, whether they were deserving of the treatment or not. Some of the "girls" were meaner than the men and carried bigger knives.

We all relished any kind of conversation we could have with Dee and soon learned that he was far better educated than the average dolt that frequents that bar — their main learning achievements seemed to be finding what they wanted to play on the jukebox and being able to count fifteen balls on the pool table.

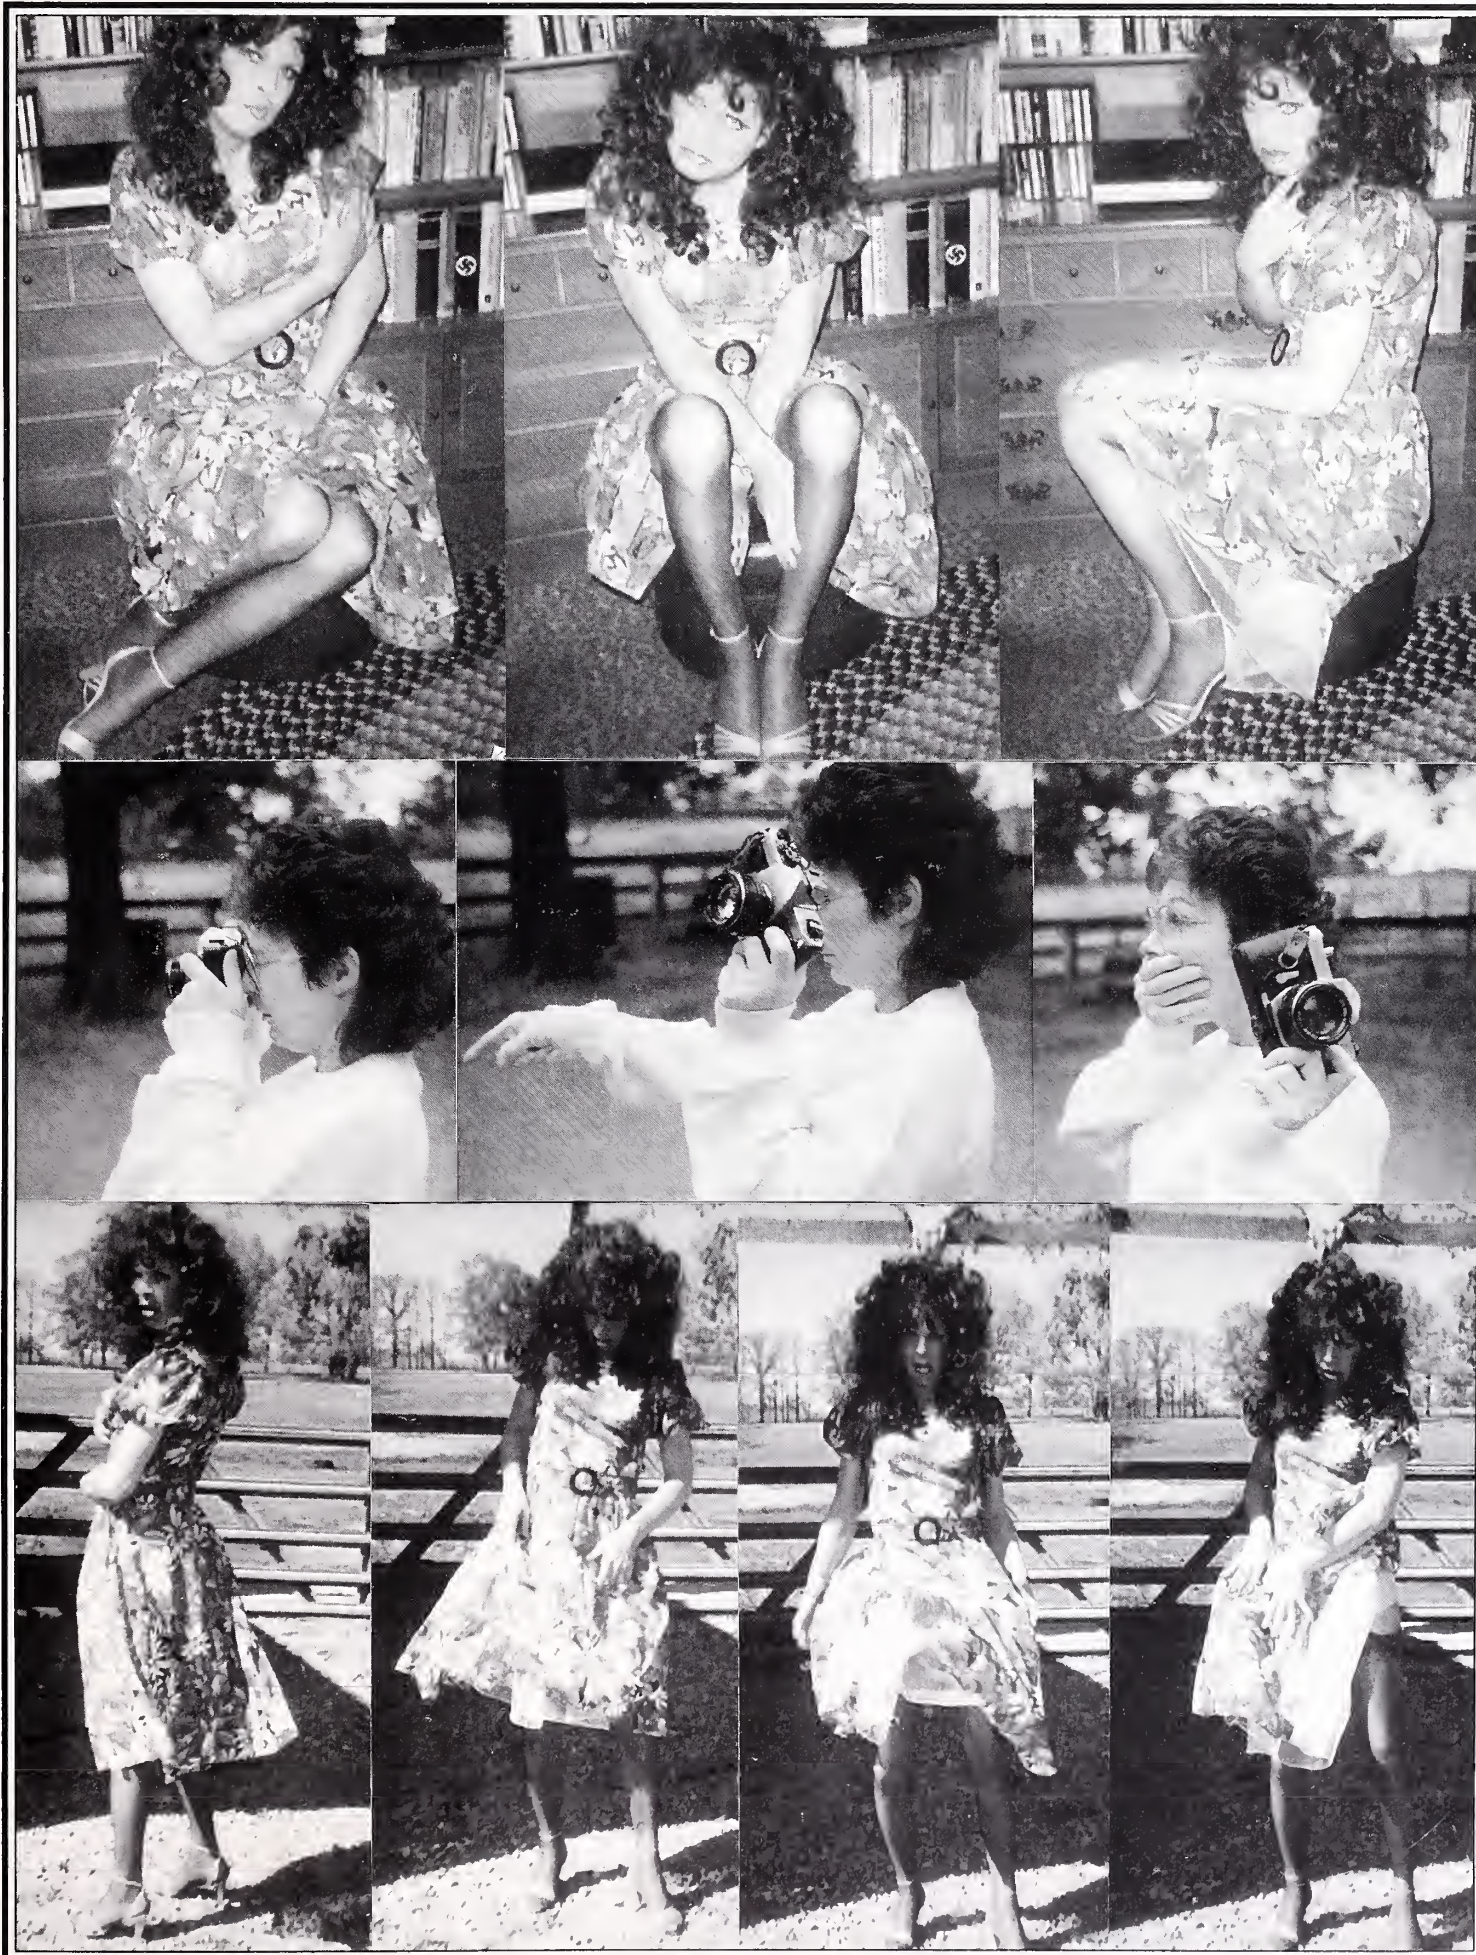

As much as everyone like Dee and looked forward to his visits, after a year he was still a mysterious figure. Nobody knew exactly what his past was, where he went when he left to go home, why he drove two cars (one a beat-up old wreck, the other a brand new, shiny, red sports car) or why he danced well but didn't seem to know the country-style music, or could play pool but didn't seem to know the rules. Dee was generous with tips for the waitresses, bought drinks for everyone frequently and loaned money to just about anyone who asked him.

Although few believed him, some of us had heard that Dee had been divorced after fifteen years of marriage. Looking boyish and in his early twenties, he couldn't have been married that long. We knew he had a girlfriend because he had shown us photographs of her, but he would never bring her to the bar. He explained this saying her job kept her out of town much of the time.

Dee's girlfriend was very pretty with long eyelashes, long fingernails and long shapely legs. She was to be envied for her long blonde hair, great wardrobe and because all the men in the bar wanted to meet her. All us girls knew that she would be a lamb among wolves if Dee ever brought her to this place, although the girls didn't think that was such a bad idea. We all disliked her, if you know what I mean.

Once, when Dee expressed his liking for our western-style outfits, we all chipped in to buy one for his girlfriend in the hope she might actually show up. The outfit had a flared denim skirt ending at the knees in a pretty flounce and buttoned all the way up the front from the hem to the waist (or unbuttoned, according to how much leg you wanted to show), with a tight denim vest and an embroidered silk long sleeve shirt. We were encouraged that we might finally meet this woman when Dee showed us the high-heeled cowgirl boots and western hat he'd bought her to go with the rest of the clothes. She didn't show. Just more photographs of her with our clothes and the skirt unbuttoned to barely below the crotch.

Now everything started to turn around. Most of the females were mad because it was thought that Dee's girlfriend was "too good" to come near such a place. The males were upset at the rapport that Dee had with the females and had begun to spread rumors that Dee was a "queer." This bar was the kind of place where the tattoos — men's and women's — couldn't be described (even in this publication) and a person could become famous for their prison record. Dee had to go! There were threats of real personal harm or even death.

Dee left never to return and thankfully I went with him. I went not as a girlfriend, but as a friend who needed a place to stay and become anonymous as I too had someone to fear.

Following in my car, we arrived at an old two-story frame house that from its haunted look would have kept anyone away, even me. We went around to the back and parked. Dee told me to climb the metal stairs that led high and steeply to a second-story backdoor.

The old gray painted house was surrounded by unkempt, rambling rosebush vines with monster thorns. The vines reached almost to the second-story. The thorns, overhanging the stairs, were poised to rip clothing and flesh alike.

What had I gotten into? Before I could think of a way to retreat Dee beckoned me inside the dark house.

"Wait just a second while I turn on the light," Dee said and instantly there was illuminated a long hallway that ran the length of the house leading to several rooms on each side of it. The hall had a very tall ceiling and was filled with large framed posters of comic book heroes.

The whole house was a brilliant wonderland. The brick walled kitchen was set up for a gourmet chef. The dining room was filled with antique cast iron toys. The living room was large enough for a stereo, an overhead big-screen television and a nautical theme that was repeated in the brass ship's antiques, pictures and models of masted sailing ships. One other room, perhaps the largest of them all was closed. No sign of a bedroom. I was to learn shortly that the locked room was strictly Off-Limits to me. Still, I was happy to be there, even if a bit confused.

I spent a couple of weeks sleeping on the couch in the living room, keeping the house clean and cooking when needed to pay my keep and still looking for a full time job. I was growing out of the relationship that Dee and I had planned based on pure friendship. We were great buddies but I was falling in love.

We watched television or listened to records or just talked, but we were supposed to keep our relationship at just friends. I knew that Dee was in love with Chris who always seemed to be out of town with her job. I had yet to meet her. I feared for the time when Chris would come back and find Dee living with another woman; surely I would be thrown out of the house.

While vacuuming the hall one day, the phone rang. I was outside the door to the "forbidden" room. The ringing bell bade me enter and the door was unlocked. I was at first afraid of what I might find, but it was only a very large room with a large bed, many, bright floor-to-ceiling windows, plush carpeting, several wardrobe-type closets and a large rolltop desk up against one wall surrounded by shelves and shelves of books.

I found the phone on the desk and answered it. The caller was unmemorable, a salesman selling something I suppose, but I was in the forbidden room and it was grand. I couldn't help myself, I had to explore.

I felt like Goldilocks and the Three Bears, knowing I was in the wrong place but all consumed by curiosity. I had to see what was in the closets. The first one I opened was packed with women's clothes; skirts, blouses, formal gowns, dresses — I had seen some of these before. Damn! These were Chris' clothes and she would be back. There was the cowgirl outfit and other outfits Dee had shown pictures of her wearing. The second closet was full of nightgowns, slips, teddies, and babydoll nighties. They were all beautiful and expensive looking. I touched all the silks and satins and was tempted to try them on. The third closet had drawers full of the laciest, most feminine underwear that I had ever seen. I blushed at the thought of myself wearing such dainty panties and bras, although I would love to wear them for Dee.

There was something else in that closet. Shelves full of gorgeous wigs on styrofoam heads. So, Chris' hair wasn't so beautiful after all! She had been found out. What I couldn't figure out was the dark-brown and red-headed wigs because Chris was always a blonde.

Well, anyway, since Dee was at work and would not be home for hours, I decided to stay for awhile longer in this room that I'm sure every woman would love to have in their house.

I decided to fix a cup of coffee and make a few local calls, put my feet up on the desk and take a break, so to speak. While talking on the phone, I began to idly "rummage" through the desk. I know it was wrong and invaded Dee's privacy, but I was doing it absentmindedly. All I saw was paperwork until I came to a large drawer at the bottom of the desk. More photos of Chris and then some other woman with dark hair and dark-red lipstick. And then another woman, a red-head, and then a man. The man was wearing panties, garterbelt and stockings, and he was applying the finishing touches on his fully made up face. I dug deeper into the stacks of the photographs. Dee was the man in the panties and that meant that Dee and his beautiful girlfriend "Chris" were the same person.

I became extremely ill and ran for the bathroom. I cried until Dee came home from work. The only man that treated me like a lady and with whom I had fallen in love was a pervert or a homosexual. Maybe he would use me to attract other men into his home. I meant to confront him with what I had found out.

When Dee came home his charm won me over and I didn't mention anything. I just didn't want to lose what I had or maybe to even believe what my eyes had seen. It took three days and a lot of stammering to finally ask what exactly was happening here.

We had an all-night talk and surprisingly I was able to understand about crossdressing. Dee told me he knew that it really upset some women and that his first wife (of fifteen years) would get so crazy when he wanted to dress up at Hallowe'en, she would almost have to be institutionalized. I was determined not to be like her. Dee had a day off coming and I asked him to dress up for me while I was at work. He always did things for me, so I wanted to do something for him.

Dee was almost dumbstruck. He had suffered so much intolerance and guilt that this change of events was, I think, a shock.

We both were awake early that next day, me to leave for work and Dee to prepare himself for my return home. He would need a lot of time as he hadn't dressed in awhile. I could only guess what work it would take to turn this man into the feminine image I had seen in the photographs. I went off to work thinking of all his efforts and wondering what would be waiting for me when I returned home.

All day long at work I thought of how I would have to act when I got home and saw my masculine man in a dress. He looked extremely good in the photographs, but at six feet four inches it didn't seem he could pull it off in person.

I don't know what Dee was feeling as the time came for us to meet female to "female," but I was getting extremely nervous. I drove home from work slowly and walked up the back stairs to the house like a person walking towards the gallows.

I fumbled with my key at the door. I heard the clicking sound of high-heeled shoes coming down the hallway toward the door. Oh, how would I handle this? I promised myself not to upset Dee with any kind of negative reaction however his transformation had turned out.

The door opened and I was awestruck by the beautiful feminine creature before me. Dee wore a black dress that had layers of ruffles around the off-the-shoulder sleeveless top. The dress was low cut, extremely tight skirted, with more ruffles around the hem leading up along a slit in the front ending just below the crotch, bouncing and drawing attention to his long, smooth-shaven legs now covered in shiny dark nylons. He wore a red-haired wig pinned up in curls on the top of his head with a cascade of hair hanging over one shoulder. His makeup was much more colorful than most women would wear with false eyelashes, thinly arched brows, different shades of eyeshadow, blusher, glossy, red-painted lips and his beard completely covered by foundation and powder. His fingernails were beautifully long and painted a bright pearly pink.. He wore a gold belt at his very small waist and matching ankle-strap gold sandals with four-inch heels that showed his pink painted toenails. His jewelry was all large rhinestones, earrings, bracelet, and necklace. It was incredible how greatly feminine he looked. I would never have recognized him but for his height and voice.

I think Dee said something but I was preoccupied with another thought. I was staring at something really different — cleavage! How did he do that? Before I could ask, Dee turned and walked down the hall toward the living room. He walked in a feminine way, very provocative, but in no effeminate or exaggerated. He stopped at the door, tuned, smiled and beckoned me to join him in the room.

I felt really confused now. How could I be the girlfriend to this feminine creature? She needed a date in a tuxedo bearing a gift of champagne. I didn't need to be a man, however, to appreciate this supreme effort at femininity. The illusion was only slightly flawed by the height and voice, but those were easy to overlook.

The change in personality was startling as well and a bit hard to get used to, but Dee was so confident and self-assured in his femaleness that I was no longer afraid in this completely unfamiliar situation. I was now more curious than intimidated. One of my questions was answered as we sat together on the couch and Dee crossed his legs in a rather exaggerated fashion. He was wearing panties (bikini type with lots of black lace) and preferred stockings and a garter belt. He explained several of the illusions; creating false cleavage, the cinched-in tiny waist, and many makeup tricks. I guess the real question, even though we had discussed it earlier, was why, when most men would be outraged or embarrassed to death if even thinking of wearing anything remotely feminine, would Dee pursue it with such zeal?

As Dee and I have grown closer over the past ten years, we know there many questions that we probably will never be able to answer. We suppose that nothing in life can be perfectly defined and put away in a neat package. After you get over the shock that your man has his own wardrobe of women's clothing, most of it more frilly than anything you own or would even think about buying, then you have to deal with the compulsions and urges that can sometimes seem, to an outsider, to dominate his life. I understand as much as I can and I do not love him in spite of it. I love him, period.

The only thing I really dislike is the constant fear of Dee being exposed. It's a tremendous secret to have to hide from everyone. Making sure all evidence of a session of dressing or that any telltale photographs are carefully removed and then inspecting Dee for traces of makeup or nail polish have become routine. But, there is still fear that we will forget some detail. At least a married crossdresser might explain a bra or a pair of panties left out as "bad housekeeping."

On the positive side, a wife can increase her wardrobe. Dee and I wear many of the same clothes even though he is a foot taller than me. Of course, a knee-length skirt to me can be a mini-skirt to Dee. Your husband will also not gripe about going clothes shopping with you; he may need new pantyhose and not want to go through the check-out line alone. Dee helps me with my makeup, tweezing my eyebrows, rolling my hair and manicures. It is no problem thinking of a gift for Father's Day, birthdays, or anniversaries. I just pick out a frilly nightgown or a brightly colored bra and panty set. I always wonder what if the young girl at the check-out counter who is joking with my husband knew that the new slip and strapless sundress were shortly to be on the body of the handsome "older" man she is flirting with as she rings up his new shade of nail polish?

While on the subject of our husband-wife camaraderie and speaking also of my husband's birthday, I will try to provide an example of how close we are on the issue of his crossdressing as I come to the close of this letter. On the day before Dee's birthday, he was presented with a new lacy nightgown with matching panties, both in mint green. He had the next day off, so that evening I pampered him with a body shave, lotion, rub-down, manicure and pedicure with bright red polish, eyebrow plucking, and a bubble bath after which he put on the panties and gown and sat on the couch while I rolled his hair up in little, tiny pink curlers.

The next morning, his hair still in curlers and wearing the gown, he applied his makeup and was then presented with his birthday gifts. There were matching pale pink, lace trimmed panties, bra, garter belt, half-slip and stockings all wrapped separately. He clothed himself in each item and spent the day lounging around the house in dainty underwear, makeup and hair curlers as if at the end of the day he would put on a lovely gown and be off to some formal event.

In closing, we've sent along some pictures of Dee in our new summer frock. It is very full skirted and has a sewn-in net petticoat. I'm afraid the pictures are not very clear as the wind was strong and Dee had many problems controlling the very light fabric of the skirt. I did not know whether to be amused or share in his embarrassment as the wind and the dress combined in an effort to show the world his pink panties. We sent the pictures because we thought your readers might at least be amused.

Love,
Dee's Wife.
